Caverswall Castle was originally erected by Sir William de Caverswall in the reign of Edward I. The building, however, seems to have fallen into ruins during the 16th and 17th centuries, and in 1643 Matthew Cradock erected the present building on the same site. It was for some time occupied by a community of nuns.

Just a card to you hoping it may find you well & free from the present fashionable cold or cough. Today looking rather rainy I expect you are escaping the fog.
